The Impact of Child Trauma on Sensory Processing: Creating a Supportive Response for Children with Sensory Modulation Disorders: Concepts and Tools

The Michigan Social Work Continuing Education Collaborative and the National Board for Certified Counselors have each approved this training for 3.0 CEC hours. This training also counts as 3.0 hours toward the 24 hours of annual training required by MDHHS for Children’s Mental Health Professionals (CMHP). Evidence exists that children with trauma history experience sensory processing disorders across three different typologies, with sensory modulation disorders being most prevalent. Identification of behaviors that reflect sensory processing challenges is the first step in creating supportive responses, which include natural, inexpensive methods.
