Financial help for families caring for children with disabilities at home

The Family Support Subsidy (FSS) is a program that helps families who care for children with developmental disabilities at home. It provides financial support to help cover extra costs, making it easier for children to stay with their families.

Families caring for a child with a severe disability often face expenses that other families do not, such as special equipment or ongoing care. FSS helps reduce these costs and may prevent the need for more expensive care outside the home.
